Corn Silage 2015 Newsletter

As with last year, there are six corn silage sampling days that have been scheduled to allow for a likely long harvest season. Weather may dictate some of our timing, if it gets too cold, but remember that, after tasseling, number of days is actually more important than heat units. In general, about 50 days after tasseling is when corn silage will be ready to harvest, but obviously dependent on what type of structure you are filling.

This is an abbreviated newsletter, as I don't consider this to be a time of the year when you're looking for recreational reading material. You can find more information on the events listed above by contacting one of us at our offices or by looking on the web. Specifically, the Harmony programs are all detailed on the web page, or contact the Marinette office for details.

Please remember to practice safety on your farm as we head into fall harvest season.

Last note: If anyone is potentially interested in a farm manager position of a beef-based U.P. farm, contact me and I will forward you the information.
